With the end of June the social season will be practically at an end and few companies except the usual small summer afbe given until autumn. This month has been an unusually gay one for there have been a large number of June brides and beside the weddings, which are always important social functions, there have been any number of ante-nuptial companies given for the brides-elect. To judge by the number of such parties which have been crowded into the June days this year there is a good deal of truth in the old saying "All the world loves a lover," for all the friends of the brides-to-be have hastened delightfully to arrange pretty fetes for them as soon as the engagement has been announced. One of the most popular forms of entertainment for this year's brides has been the luncheon, which is a pretty function, whether it be large or small, and has obtained much favor with Indianapolis hostesses. Most of the bridal luncheons which have been given this season have been small, in most cases including only the bridal party and perhaps the young women who are to be assistants at the house. A number of beautiful receptions have been given also for the summer brides, their maids and guests and card companies and showers without number have been on the entertainment lists of the popular brides. The latter form of company is one of the most charming, the bride and her friends. Usually the guests include only a small the bride's most intimate friends, who delight to shower her with pretty things, and though the gifts in such cases are usually comparatively inexpensive, they are always dainty and pretty, and a source of delight to the bride-elect In spite of the popularity of the bridal companies, however-or perhaps because of it-two or three Indianapolis brides-tobe are starting an innovation against the established order of things and their example will, perhaps, be followed by a few of the autumn brides at least. These girls are refusing the companies which their ing them sweetly and gracefully, but none the less firmly. One of them, an specially popular bride, will have no companies; except a single one which all of her bridesmaids will give for her; another one whose friends are anxious to plan pretty parties for her declares that she prefers her parher wedding, rather than now mind and her time are full of with modistes, tailors and florists; and a third who will go abroad

A LAWYER'S EXPERIENCE. There is one Indianapolis lawyer who will hereafter observe little anniversaries with greater punctiliousness than has hitherto been his custom. Mr. Lawyer possesses a wife who is not only unusually bright and charming, but who is also unusual tact-which is at once the reason and the explanation of his future thoughtfulness. Two or three weeks ago directly after her marriage says frankly that she has no intention of tiring herself out so with parties that she cannot enjoy her voyage. There is something, of course, to be said on this side of the subject, but the fact remains that no entertainments are prettier or more interesting than those for prospective brides; and that there are none which hostesses like better to plan. So, though a few of the matrimonially-inclined maids may refuse the attentions offered them, it is scarcely probable that the pretty fashion of feting
